About IATE

On November 25, 1950, at MS University, Baroda, the Indian Association of Teacher Educators (IATE), the nation's oldest and most prominent professional body for teacher educators, was founded by the efforts of notable educationists late Professors T.K.N. Menon, Hansa Ben Mehta, and S.N. Mukerjee. It was registered under Societies of Registration Act in 1966. IATE has been instrumental in giving teacher educators in India and its adjacent nations a forum for substantive discussions on a range of topics pertaining to the education system in general and teacher education in particular. It has greatly influenced the policy debate that has shaped the system. Organization of annual conferences, national and international seminars and workshops as well as the publication of its journal are some of the regular features of IATE. About the Theme

The National Education Policy 2020 has proposed that the Indian Education System is to be strengthened in tune with Indian Knowledge System. The aim of Indian education is a meaningful life, and this shift in focus will not be achieved until the Indian knowledge system is fully integrated into national education. In education today, we consider what and how to teach. Indian knowledge traditions have traditionally placed more emphasis on how than what. The wisdom of ancient India is crucial for striking a balance between lifelong learning and education. India possesses a wealth of information that enhances Indian civilization, which is why integrating IKS is now required in teacher education curriculum and practices as well. NCFSE-2023 has also emphasized on PanchKoshiyaVikas for the holistic development of child. Teachers must take the lead in integrating it into the educational system. The significance of teachers and teacher education in this context has been acknowledged by the National Education Policy 2020. The preparation of quality teachers with a strong foundation in Indian ethos at all levels of education is the need of the hour.

In this light the theme "Indian Knowledge System: Teacher, Teaching and Learning" has been chosen for this year's IATE annual conference. The desired outcomes of the conference will show the path to all teacher education institutions for developing a clear IKS implementation strategy.
